Jason Allen's first full-length collection (his first book Gunmetal Blue, Jane's Boy Press 2015 is worth checking out too) tackles big issues: survival, recovery, family, addiction but delivers poem after poem. His poems resemble an open hand which helps guide the readers through the wreckage to ultimately find pieces of peace. The one poem that I can't (and don't want to) get out of my head is "Pop". Written almost as a love letter, the words in the poem reflect heavy thoughts that the speaker (though, through evidence, we know it's Allen) has carried towards his father to the point where the emotions just come undone, leaving the power of his words to radiate long after the poem is through. Support Jason Allen's poetry and support small presses. You won't be disappointed by this read, I promise!
